beguty Warden Finlay says that Webster has been slightly ill, but that he did not dream of his being seriously so, and yesters day, in response to an inquiring note sent to him by a reporter. Webster replied that he wasn't feeling very well, but that he would be down to court to-day.

Evelyn Granville, the "common law wife," on whose account Webster killed Goodwin, was with him nearly all the forenoon.

An Everyng World reporter calling at the Tombs to-day was informed that no visitors were admitted to see Webster.

In response to an inquiry Webster returned a verbal reply that he was still pretty weak, the but fell much better than yesterday and hoped to be able to go to court to-morrow.
